International arbitration has become the preferred method of dispute resolution for cross-border commercial transactions. One of the key features of international arbitration is party autonomy, which allows parties to shape the arbitral process to suit their specific needs.

However, party autonomy is not absolute. Institutional rules play an important role in shaping the arbitral process and can limit party autonomy in certain respects.

This book explores the concept of party autonomy in international arbitration, examining the extent to which parties can shape the arbitral process and the impact of institutional rules on party autonomy.

Chapter 1: The Concept of Party Autonomy

This chapter examines the concept of party autonomy in international arbitration. It discusses the different aspects of party autonomy, including the freedom to choose the arbitral institution, the arbitral tribunal, the seat of arbitration, the language of arbitration, and the applicable law.

Chapter 2: The Impact of Institutional Rules on Party Autonomy

This chapter examines the impact of institutional rules on party autonomy. It discusses the different types of institutional rules and how they can affect party autonomy. It also discusses the role of the arbitral tribunal in interpreting and applying institutional rules.

Chapter 3: The Limits of Party Autonomy

This chapter examines the limits of party autonomy in international arbitration. It discusses the different factors that can limit party autonomy, including public policy, the law of the seat of arbitration, and the rights of third parties.

Chapter 4:

This chapter concludes the book by summarizing the main findings and offering some thoughts on the future of party autonomy in international arbitration.
