The plot against Trump began long before he ever announced his candidacy for president. In fact, it can be traced back to the days of the Obama administration, when a group of high-level officials began to plot ways to prevent Trump from ever taking office. These officials were motivated by a variety of factors, including their personal dislike of Trump, their fear of his policies, and their belief that he was unfit for office.

As Trump's campaign gained momentum, the plot against him intensified. The Obama administration began to leak damaging information about Trump to the press, and they also worked to suppress his campaign's access to funding and resources.
